'SYNANON IN PRISON'

Walter Cronkite and Charles Kuralt report on an unusual experiment being conducted at Nevada State Prison by Synanon, a self-help organization dedicated to working with narcotics addicts. While there are few addicts at the prison, Synanon found that its techniques work equally well with alcoholics and habitual criminals.

Synanon's social workers are former addicts. Their therapeutic tools are their straight talk and the examples they set —instilling in the addict a sense of self-discipline and the desire to mature emotionally.

Films show a Synanon "game," a kind of group therapy geared to expose destructive behavior patterns. The prisoners in the group impose their own discipline, and inmate leaders learn to use their talents in constructive ways. In a filmed interview, Synanon worker Candy Latson, a former drug addict who started the Nevada project three years ago, explains the organization's goals at the prison and analyzes the project's success.

Synanon founder Charles E. Dederich.
